Use Your Apprenticeship Levy to Pay for Training

What is the apprenticeship levy?

The Apprenticeship Levy is a levy on UK employers to fund apprenticeships and help their staff upskill.

21 staff trained.

We helped Coventry City Council train 21 of their staff – none of them had the business analyst job title. They were doing systems admin support roles and had to develop new processes and systems for the council.

The council wanted to spend the levy to upskill their staff. The staff was allowed to choose the apprenticeship they wanted to study.

They chose us because:

- Someone who worked in the council trained with us and recommended us to the council.
- They liked our curriculum.
- They liked that we include the exam fees for the BCS Diploma in Business Analysis

18 staff training with us using the levy

A well-known Furniture and Home Furnishings Manufacturing Company, Wren came to us because they were unhappy about another training provider and were looking for public courses for the BCS International Business Analysis Diploma training. We told them about the benefits of the BA Apprenticeship programme, the fact that it includes the BCS International Business Analysis Diploma certifications and that they can save money by using the levy. Hence, they decided to enrol their staff in our apprenticeship rather than doing the public courses.

Before enrolling their staff in our apprenticeship, they did an in-house course with us and put a few staff on our public courses to experience the quality of our teaching before committing themselves to the apprenticeship programme, which is an 18-month programme. They liked the teaching and programme. They liked the training and the support we provided to their staff and since then have enrolled 2 cohorts on our Business Analyst Apprenticeship programme.

5 staff are training with us using the apprenticeship levy

Aurora is a small management consultancy company in the financial industry. The founder and managing director was the one who initially contacted us.

They were training their graduate employees with us on the BCS Diploma in Business Analysis and when we told them about the apprenticeship, they decided to use it as a training programme for their graduates to save money by using the levy. They've trained with us already and were satisfied with the quality of our training.

5 staff trained using the levy

One of the apprentices that is currently on programme initially enquired about our BCS Business Analysis Diploma training and we told him about the apprenticeship as an option to save money for his organisation by using the levy. He liked the idea put it forward to his manager and got approval for himself and 2 other colleagues. Since then Smartest Energy has been enrolling new staff in the business analyst apprenticeship.
